To the right is a page describing and showing pictures of a specific architectural project. There may be cool animations allowing visitors to navigate the buildings.

600 px screen width

To the left is a view of the index with a 600px screen width. All sections will stack on top of one another. The arrow placed above the first section represents a button that will send visitors back to the top of the page. It would exist as a fixed position element. No animation would lead into the site when viewed on a small screen.
